

Developing Capacities:

Observing, Reflecting, Containing in the context of Clinical Work

A Half Day Study Event
Saturday,
18 February 2012

SYHA Edinburgh Central

What do we bring to work with children, young people and adults? How do we define the capacities that facilitate our engagement with and understanding of the people we are working with?

An event co-ordinated and facilitated by

Scottish Institute of Human Relations

Developing Capacities

this exciting study event brings together two distinguished senior clinicians, Robert Olsner and Janine Sternberg, who are involved in psychotherapeutic practice, teaching and research in America and England respectively. Each has considerable experience in their work with children, adolescents and adults where describing and understanding the inter-subjective experience between practitioner or therapist and client or patient is of crucial importance.

The half day programme will be of interest to practitioners and clinicians working with children and adults in psychotherapy, nursing, psychology, medicine, counselling, social work and art therapy in both the NHS, voluntary and private sectors.

The event provides a unique opportunity to learn further about the observation of differing states of mind, the skill of reflecting on these and the containment of powerful emotional experiences in brief or intensive therapeutic practice.
